“ Uncle Jerry was my uncle because he was my dad's brother. He was also my uncle because he was married to my mom's sister, Wilma. For a while, we all lived in the same little town and my double first cousins went to the same school as my younger siblings and I. We were always at each other's homes, and different combinations of us would hang out together. Nobody at the school, or the local clinic, or anywhere else in town could figure out which kids belonged to which parents, and we added to the confusion by calling Uncle Jerry and Aunt Wilma "Uncle Dad" and "Aunt Mom." Such happy memories! Uncle Jerry had a very sharp, analytical mind. My favorite memory of him is when Aunt Wilma asked him to measure a small section of floor that needed to be retiled. He walked over, eyeballed it for a moment, and said, "It looks like approximately 127.5 square centimeters." I don't think he understood why I was laughing so hard!

“ Jerry and Wilma were like family to me and Wilma often called me Sis. Gil and I spent many great evenings with them at our home or theirs. We would eat together and then play canasta or Mexican dominos. Dear friends like them are rare treasures. I remember when Gil was in the last stages of ALS and was bedridden, every night they showed up to help me get h settled in bed for the night. I never ask they just did it out of love and friendship. After Gil passed away they more or less adopted me, friends like that are priceless. Go rest high on that mountain Jerry, we will miss you my good and loyal friend.
