“ The Mohlers and McNeeses in Ponca City, OK, shared many family vacations, picnics, meals and neighborhood adventures during the 50's and 60's. There were always long-winded stories, he-said/she-said discussions, laughter and camaraderie. On one vacation trip, both families stopped at a restaurant for lunch. There were at least a dozen of us, so all the children were seated at one table; the adults at another. A black and white sign was visible near the kitchen. It proclaimed something to the effect that the restaurant was proud of their food and their kitchen was open to inspection. We took that as a challenge. We "kids" got up and started across the restaurant to scrutinize the kitchen for ourselves, much to the "What do you all think you are doing?" looks of our parents. I don't recall how far we got in our quest to inspect, but it made for terrific memory. Since Mike was usually at the forefront of such adventures, I'm certain he had a role in its initiation. - Jill Mohler Kelsey
