“ Wes and I spent many of nights talking in the woods and comforting each other. The first or second time I met him we almost got into it. I was talking late at night and he told me to shhhh. I ignored him and he told me with more force to shut up. I saw him bowing his head, after a second or two I said what the hell was that about. He said to me with sorrow in his eyes that my momma always taught me when you hear a siren you pray for the person. Wes did that every time he heard a siren. Wes was a man among men, he always had my back. He had a passion for cooking as we would talk for hours of him working at Spring Creek Grill in Springdale. I cherish the time that I was fortunate to spend time with a true friend and an absolute man of God. I love you brother, Right On.
