“ I will always remember Aunt Wilma as that little red headed spit fire of a woman. Always a jokester. But always there with a understanding nature. The youngest of her siblings and that is our connection I being the youngest also. We joked about the olders being bossy an pushy, but most of all it was the love between all the families, playing music, singing and enjoying family. Families moved to all corners of the states and tradition was lost. But Aunt Wilma still came for weddings an reunions and funerals. Still with the little red head spirit. Never taking no for an answer, she would convince you into a yes. She wanted to know you were good with your maker or maybe it was just me. But there was never a time we didn't go to church in our talks. She seemed to bounce back with more vigor after every obstacle in her path She was small by statue but Giant in her faith. I will cherish those memories of her forever and a day. Till we meet again Love ya
